How to Use this Book

This book is intended to help your child learn various proverbs through repetition. Writing lines is a time-tested way that children have retained valuable wisdom for generations, and it still works today. This will help guide them toward memorizing 15 proverbs, each one a jewel of wisdom, ready to be brought out while they navigate life.

While this book is intended as a daily, individual practice for your child, that does not mean they need to do it alone.

This is the recommended way to use this book.

Read and Explain

At the start of the week, read the proverb to your child. Make sure they understand all of the words. Give them some sense of the overall meaning.

Write

Instruct them to write the proverb in their best handwriting. Doing their best will provide even more dividends for their time spent.

Three spaces are provided each day for writing. If you find your child does not need that much writing to internalize a verse, feel free to lower that amount. This book was made for the child, not the child for the book.

Review

Several review pages are included at the end. These can be used as “tests” or as periodic boosters to aid retainment after your child has completed the book. Feel free to copy these for reuse.

Supplemental

Some days have extra verses related to the proverb of that week, and can be read by you or your child. This is optional, but can round out understanding and add more pegs to aid in memorization.

Journal

This book also facilitates a way for your child to fill out a daily thankfulness journal, which is a great way to begin any day. It also encourages one fruit of the spirit to focus on for that day, to improve upon. These are also optional.

If you decide to have your child participate, be sure they understand what each one entails.
